

SHAPE POEMS

Squares are definitely
not for me,
and that's because
they're square, you see.
The lines go straight
to just one place,
There's not much fun
in a little square place.

A diamond is better
but not by far -
It's just a square
that's been tipped ajar.

A rectangle has a longer face,
but it's just a square that was in a race!

I have fun with
triangles, any day!
They're pretty cool
in every way.

But my favorite shape,
the one I like best -
Is... I'm not going to tell you,
but I bet you guessed!

What is your very favorite shape? Can you compare shapes to objects? You can write a shape poem too, using each shape to say what it makes you think of, or to describe what it looks like to you. When you have finished writing your poem, you can draw your shape, write a final copy of your poem inside that shape, and then color and decorate your page. You don't have to rhyme your poem. If you get stuck, you can use the format below to help you out.

A circle is good for:

A square is not:

Stars are sometimes:

And triangles make me think of:
